

EDITORIAL

This is the fifth journal which the Club has published within twelve years, and it is to be hoped that we can keep up this rate — of a journal every two or three years — indefinitely. In this issue I have had the support of even more contributors than in 1965, and I hope this pleasing trend will continue.

Since the publication of the last journal the Club has celebrated its 75th anniversary with an exhibition and special articles in the press. There has also been a full programme of meetings and excursions. The Club has continued its valuable survey of the flora and fauna of the Bocas islands with expeditions to Huevos and Chacachacare in 1965 and 1966. Field-work done on those occasions is reported in this issue.

Plans for the future include participation in various projects, including conservational and educational improvements, and we look forward to a period of continued expansion in the Club's activities.
